Treasurer and Collector Black has another installment of his serial story that may not prove interesting reading to many of our readers, but the printer man is not kicking. It only hurts those who possess less than $25 of this world's goods, and don't effect us plutocrats.

Mrs. M. Clements of St. Louis, Mo. came in from Durango Tuesday evening, to inspect the Aztec ruins. The lady is an extensive traveler and a student of antiquities. She is a relative of Captain Victor Cherbonier, who was stationed in Arizona and New Mexico years ago, and whose father fought under the great Napoleon.

Aztec is sorely in need of better gocomodations for the traveling and resident people: The one hotel we boast of is up-to-date; both in rooms, cuisine, etc., but is entirely too small in amount pathy in our hour of trial and sorrow of rooms to accomodate the number of people who arrive here dally. The Neglected mine owners have curtailed their working force owing to an expected strike of the workingmen in the Colorado smelters. There are now working on the dump about forty men, the night shift having been abolished, There is $150,000 of ore in sight on the dump. The new mill, a new process, is more than meeting the expectations of the owners. It is said to work $7.50 ore with very little loss in the tailings.

Condemn Not, Lest Ye Be Condemned.

Certain happenings in Aztec the past week has set The Index to thinking that while many of us are professed followers of Christ yet how few display that sperit of love which Christ, taught. To the nero who, under the stress of excitement or necessity performs deeds of valor, we give unstinted praise; but never a word of encouragement to the poor, breaking neart that is sinking under its weight of care. The kindly word or friendly hand clasp costs us nothing, yet they may clasp costs us nothing, yet they may prove the salvation of some soul ready to sink beneath life's burdens. It is such a sweet, gracious thing to see only the good in our follow-beinge, The spring lock in the ante-room of Don't be afraid of rating their worth too the Rebecca hall is a source of annoyance high; they will understand better than to the absent-minded members.
